

“The importance of aimless fun, and how habits of careless joy create strong persons”

Why can't we help acting like crazy around young children? When a child is in it's mothers womb you wait for it beeing born. An when the child is born you wait for it's first smile. At the very moment of the first smile, joy is born and fun has begun.

None of us would let other people see our gestures or hear our babble as we do our best to activate the newborn. Why do we act like this? Because we are responsible people and we know that aimless fun and careless joy is important. - It creates the most important of all important things: meaning.
