

Brynjar Karl Birgisson, earned his nickname "The LEGO boy" after having built a 6,33-meter long replica of the TITANIC out of 56 thousand LEGO bricks, when he was ten.

His story went viral and people all over the world followed his building process and supported him all the way to the finish line. Today he follows his ship where ever it travels and tells people about how and why he build it, at the same time encouraging kids to follow their own ambitious dream goal, because if I can do it! Everyone can.

The LEGO Titanic project paved the way for Brynjar to shed light on the positive side of autism.

Here is an open link to Brynjar's story:

<https://en.calameo.com/read/003138568a93acbf966d1>

